PRODUCTION NOTES

The still is filled with grain neutral spirit, and the botanical recipe added with some water. This is left to steep for 12 hours, which begins the process of extracting the flavour from the juniper . The still is then heated by an external steam jacket to boil the liquid. As the pot begins to boil, vapours move up the short column of the still to the condenser, where they condense and are collected. Progressing with the distillation the other botanicals , lemon , basil and dill , the most gentl...
